Warning - Septuagint \(LXX\) does not match Masoretic Hebrew. An added line in Deuteronomy 6:3, while truthful, seems to be explanatory comment.

The 1851 Benton Septuagint ($30) tells of other OT translations into Greek where one changed passages pointing to Jesus. Even pre-Jesus copies differ, Benton infers Alexandrius (5th C) used Hebrew to amend Vaticanus (4th C).

Jerome translated Hebrew into Latin Vulgate. Benton still recommends Greek Septuagint because early Church Fathers made extensive use of it.

Benton says Torah reliable, but other books problematic. He says scholars would not forget Hebrew in 35 years under new Ptolemy king. Thus, he believes Septuagint translated solely for Alexandrian library. After 200 years with Hellenized great-grandchildren, the library copies became the norm.

Side Note:

This Latin Vulgate version is available from ChristianBook.com

Jerome translated the Old Testament directly into Latin using the 4th Century Hebrew text instead of through the Greek Septuagint.

Vulgar/Vulgate here merely means “Common” (specifically the language of the Roman Empire)

The word “hear” in Hebrew is Sh’mah. Thus verses 4-9 are often called “The Sh’mah” and became the core reference by faithful Jews.

The Orthodox took verse 8 literally by tying a small box to their dominant hand. It winds up near their heart but still tied to the hand.

A second box is bound on (or near) the forehead. Each contains four passages in ink on parchment:
Deuteronomy 6:4-9 and 11:13-21
Exodus 13:1-10 and 13:11-16.

These “tefillin” boxes (Greek: phylakterion) keep God’s laws close to their hand/heart and mind.
